Dear Dr. De Vocht,

Could you send me a link to the over hundred peer reviewed papers you created, and which you mention on several web pages? Also I was searching for your C.V. I have searched for both on the entire web, also on the Bristol University website, in your personal blog, but both links are absent. I found over 100 papers on PubMed, but publishing papers there is not per definition at the same time a guarantee of being peer-reviewed.

Thank you very much in advance for the cooperation,

Antoinette Janssen
Norway

---

On Wed, 17 Jun 2020 at 16:00, Frank De Vocht <frank.devocht@bristol.ac.uk> wrote:

Dear Antoinette,

The papers on PubMed are all peer-reviewed.

Best wishes,

Frank

Frank de Vocht
Reader in Epidemiology and Public Health

Applied Data Science Team co-Lead NIHR Applied Research Collaboration West (NIHR ARC West)
NIHR School for Public Health Research
Academic Lead Year 1 MBChB (MB21) ‘Foundations of Medicine’ Programme

Population Health Sciences
Bristol Medical School | University of Bristol
Canynge Hall | 39 Whatley Road | Bristol, BS8 2PS
Tel: +44(0)117.928.7239
e-mail: frank.devocht@bristol.ac.uk
Academic blog: http://www.funpolice.eu | twitter: @frankdevocht
Dear Dr. De Vocht,

Since we live in times with a growing need for fact checking, I have to mention that since you wrote that all your articles on PubMed are peer reviewed, and I checked one of the total, that I do not find the term peer-reviewed, by who, and where it is published.
I have to disappoint you when it comes to trust: I do not trust words, as long these are not proved to be true, fact checked.

So: by WHO are these papers PEER reviewed, and where are the links? I have asked about this issue on Quora, and got answers from academics, also lawyers. A link to a C.V. is the least what has to be added to a professional academic profile, and the peer-reviewed articles should be present in a link, and proved to be peer-reviewed. Otherwise the use of the term is fraudulent.

I assume that you understand the importance of the possibility to be checked, and I look forward to your full C.V., with also a link to your papers, and who reviewed these, PEER reviewed these.

Thank you in advance,

Antoinette Janssen

4. On Wed, 17 Jun 2020 at 18:07, Frank De Vocht <frank.devocht@bristol.ac.uk> wrote:

I find this quite an inappropriate and rude email to send to someone to be honest. Before sending these kind of emails I suggest you first familiarise yourself with how Pubmed, peer-reviewed journals, and the academic publication system works. All the information you are looking for is available on the internet, and I will not be using my time creating some CV in a format specially for you. Especially because I have no idea who you are nor do I think we have ever met.

Regards,
Frank
Dr. De Vocht,

A CV is highly needed, especially in these times where a lot of fake news, false information, etc. is overruling truth. A C.V. can be shown proudly, with openness, transparency, unless one has to hide something. It is a matter of strategy to "forget" it, on each website, or to send offensive emails as an answer on a decent and honest fact checker. I have now even more reasons to distrust you. You are a fact checker yourself, as I understand from blog posts you wrote. But obviously not anybody else than you have the right to fact check.

Antoinette Janssen